National Register of Historic Places Registration Form

This form is for use in nominating or requesting determinations for individual properties and districts. See instructions in How to Complete the National Register of Historic Places Registration Form (National Register Bulletin 16A). Complete each item by marking "x" in the appropriate box or by entering the information requested. If an item does not apply to the property being documented, enter "N/A" for "not applicable." For functions, architectural classification, materials, and areas of significance, enter only categories and subcategories from the instructions. Place additional entries and narrative items on continuation sheets (NPS Form 10-900a). Use a typewriter, word processor, or computer, to complete all items.

Section 7. Description

Summary:

The Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District contains approximately 1, 489 acres in the north western part of Pike Township, Marion County and the southern part of Eagle Township in Boone County, Indiana. It is roughly bounded by Interstate 865 on the north, Interstate 465 on the north east, Eagle Creek in the east central part, with a section moving eastward in the vicinity of West 79th Street on the south east side and Lafayette Road as its southern tip. Northward from there, extensive properties along the Moore Road Corridor flesh out the west side of the district, and along West 96th Street an arm of the district reaches to touch Cooper Road.

The district includes properties which contribute to all three historic themes described in the Multiple Property Listing: "Rural and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township (Boone County) and Pike Township (Marion County), Indiana, 1820-1956. Outstanding features of the district include extensive and well-maintained horse pastures and other farms and facilities related to the Traders Point Hunt, the longest lasting organization dedicated to the sport of fox hunting in Indiana. In addition, the district contains many resources which relate to a period of country estate development, engendered by wealthy and influential Indianapolis families, especially in Pike Township. Finally, several cemeteries and other properties recall the earliest local settlement of this area.

Natural Features

The Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District is located primarily in Pike Township, Marion County, with a portion, to the north of 96th Street, located in Eagle Township, Boone County. The district includes parts of Sections 16, 15, 21, 22, 23 and 28 in Pike Township and parts of Sections 9, 10, and 11 in Eagle Township, Boone County. The land, throughout this area, north west of Indianapolis is gently rolling, with a low valley, Traders Hollow running in a north south direction. Most of the land features broad expanses of horse or cattle pastures, but occasionally, the drainages are marked by steep bluffs. The primary organizing natural feature is Eagle Creek. The district lies within the watershed of this large creek which also feeds into the Eagle Creek Reservoir and Park to the south. Eagle Creek also serves as a secondary reservoir, with wetlands and pools within the district. The water way is the eastern boundary of the district in its southern part. At the base of the district, a bridge carries Lafayette Road over Eagle Creek, although scheduled for replacement, it has been included in the district.

The district is rich in waterways. Feeding into Eagle Creek are the secondary drainages, Shamrock Branch, Sheets Creek and McCurdy's Creek. The erosive effect of these creeks has caused the wearing of the natural hollows and bluffs which provide a contrast to the pastures and croplands on the plateaus. Part of the Eagle Creek reservoir and watershed, a large lake is located about midpoint in the district, just east of Eagle Creek and fed by the waterway. This body of water effectively screens the creek and the rest of the district from the modern suburban development which lies immediately to the east. There are also other, small farm ponds on many of the properties within the district, providing water for stock and other purposes.

Patterns of Spatial Organization

The historic spatial organization of the district, then as now, evolved around Moore Road and Eagle Creek. The farmlands which were present during the early period of occupation organized along the waterway, for the enrichment of crops, the fertile farmland and for access to water for human as well as stock consumption. On the other hand, intensive modern suburban developments have tended to be oriented toward the major east-west roads and away from Moore Road and Eagle Creek. There is one exception to this rule, in the Loveland development between 92nd and 93rd Street off Moore Road, which emerged at the close of World War II (although the addition was platted earlier). This has not been included in the district, because the Multiple Property Listing which established contexts for the district did not include suburban development. The Estate Era added a number of large farms with acreage accumulated from smaller farms. These are discussed later. The general pattern of a farmstead, with the farmhouse located near the entrance or roadway, has been maintained in a few instances, but as the Estate Era developed, the grand country homes were built farther back on the property. This is true for the Elder-Bowman home. For the most part, the farms of the district are located west of Eagle Creek. However, some remnant elements of the Krannert Estate have been included, located east of the creek, along W. 79th Street. Also in this area are large properties related to locally prominent individuals, such as the Noells and the Lacys.

Cultural Elements

Circulation Networks

The Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District is organized around two main roadways. The first, Moore Road, a secondary arterial, runs approximately southwest to northeast, beginning at Lafayette Road just south of 79th Street. It is a historic road, maintaining approximate width, and route location throughout the period of significance. The road is significant as an artery which connected the farmlands to markets as early as 1855. It would have connected to the former town of Traders Point located just south of the southern boundary of the district. Although it no longer exists, it is recalled by the district name and as a local landmark. Via Lafayette Road, a regional artery since c. 1830, farm goods could connect to Indianapolis and communities to the north. In addition, Moore Road retains much of its associated farms and buildings, as well as mature woods and trees which would have been present during the period of significance and earlier.

The second organizing circulation artery is West 96th Street which is located in the northern section of the district (See Location/Sketch Map). This road, although not as old as Moore Road, has retained its width, route and associations since at least 1956 and before. A local farm road which was present during the agricultural area, is Streibeck Road, now providing access to the Sutphin farm. It retains its role as a circulation element connecting the farm with the more heavily used, 96th Street. This illustrates modification of landscape features by estate owners as they accumulated farm parcels.

Agricultural Landscapes and components (Pastures, croplands, horse pastures)

The agricultural landscape of the district is rich with historical precedent, featuring a variety of vegetation related to past and present land uses. There are croplands relating to agricultural activity throughout the district, but notably west of Moore Road in the southern part of the district, connected to Traders Point Farm, in the central part of the district between 86th and 88th Streets and in the areas in the north and north east, including parts of the Sutphin Farm. As described in the MPL, these are generally smaller acreages devoted to crops which relate to either cattle production or hay. Unlike the large, broad acreages used by modern cash crop farming, these are generally bordered by wood lots and gorse. The fields are smaller. Some of the farm acreage throughout the district has been converted to smaller parcels. Individual residences have been built where larger family farms once existed. This is especially true along the south east side of West 96th Street. However, several remnant farms still exist to recall the original agricultural nature of the area. The landscape, even in this area, retains an appearance from 1956 or earlier. As suggested in the MPL (Steelwater, 2006), one can see the "intimate pasture-and treeline landscape" of small-herd cattle farming in many places along West 96th Street and Moore Road.

Fields related to equestrian activities are prevalent throughout the district. Hallmarks of this feature typically include mown grass and three or four-board wood fencing. The latter is a distinctive element of horse pastures and provides a satisfying landscape feature in many places throughout the district. One of the most prominent equestrian facilities is the Fortune Farm located north of W. 96th Street at the northern limit of the district.

Once a major dairy area serving Indianapolis, the district is again experiencing a resurgence of such agricultural production. The Traders Point Creamery and related farms have brought back this land use, with the currently-popular practice of organic farming. Lands devoted to this use are primarily in the central portion of the district.

Most of the large farms contain from two to twelve equestrian or stock pastures. Because of the practical requirements of counting resources, we have only counted such multiple pastures as one site. This may have resulted in a somewhat misleading resource count in the nomination. However, when there is a distinctive difference between the layout, and often the edge conditions of pastures and croplands, we have described and listed them as separate sites (where they are major elements of the property). For the most part, these uses are consistent over time, while individual crops grown are not. Integrity of such sites rests in patterns of consistent agricultural use (pasture, cropland, forest), not in the individual vegetative history.

Buildings, Structures and Objects
Farmsteads, Estates

The district contains a number of farmstead-estates which distinguish its character and contribute to the historic themes which have been delineated in the Multiple Property Listing: Rural and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township and Pike Township, Indiana 1820 – 1956. Among these are the Traders Point Farm, at 8084 Moore Road. The farmstead is a typically clustered early twentieth century collection of buildings relating to stock farming, and includes barns, silos, and other buildings. A component of the larger, historic Bowman Elder holdings, this property is historically tied by these family associations. The Russell Fortune II horse farm in the northern section of the district is also a large property holding relating to the families which established rural estates in the area. The Elder-Kunz-Hornaday farm retains some of the components of a farmstead, but its significance is largely in its associations. The Sutphin estate retains the barns and elements of the original Madiera farm as well as elements of the earlier, Streibeck farm. Some properties contain all or part of the elements of the original farmstead, perhaps the farmhouse, barn and one or two other buildings. These include the De Long Dairy Farm at 8561 Moore Road, and Spring Brook Farm.

Notable historic residences within the district include the Bowman Elder home, on Moore Road, the Krannert Gatehouse, Bath House and Gazebo (in the vicinity of 79th Street) as well as the Dr. Noell Home, and the Lacy Home, both on 79th Street. The former William Fortune House, garden and garage on Moore Road demonstrate a dramatic architectural departure from tradition in their Art Moderne style. The gable front house located at 8798 Moore Road and the Moore-Asher house among others, provide a glimpse of nineteenth century farmhouses.

The district also contains a building related to the agricultural themes of the nineteenth and early twentieth century. Located on Lafayette Road at the southern edge of the district, the Farm Bureau Cooperative complex is a rural resource which recalls the last years of farm activity in the district. Although some of the facility has been removed, it retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district. It consists of a wood frame, metal-clad building on a poured concrete foundation. Above a long, narrow gable roofed retail and storage building, the grain elevator remains, with the superstructure removed. Behind the building to the west is a silo and tall corn crib.

Buildings that relate to the Estate Era include not just high-style mansions, but often, vernacular support facilities. In particular, stables and loafing sheds illustrate the equine culture unique to this part of central Indiana.¹

While the district contains several high-style buildings and a few which are significant for their association with early architectural styles, the bulk of the district is significant for its association with agricultural and recreational themes. As a rural historic district, buildings are viewed as components of the larger, cultural landscape, keeping in mind that architectural qualities are not necessarily the prime requirement for inclusion as a contributing resource. In this case, the character-defining qualities of the cultural landscape, including land use, topography, circulation, edge-defining structures and land forms are primary. Many modest buildings and structures are included because they represent an element in the agricultural context, or even the evolution of the property. Thus, extremely modest sheds, silos, tracks, courses, small buildings, later tenant houses, all play a role in depicting the life of the historic theme. Of course, to be included, all resources must fall within the period of significance, contribute to the cultural landscape and retain adequate integrity.

A number of buildings have been moved from outside the area. While these often contribute to the contemporary agricultural or other themes, we have followed standard practice and considered them non-contributing. We have not included temporary, portable buildings or sheds in our resource count. Buildings which do not have foundations, such as those on the Wild Air Farm, have been grouped as a single element, based on their clustering pattern. Small dependencies, such as silos, when they are connected to a barn have been counted with the larger building. The same is true for several pools, which are connected by walks or structures to a main building.

Recreational Landscapes

The district contains two types of recreational landscapes. A Jewish summer camp facility, the Goldman Union Camp Institute reflects, in a general way, the Country Life Movement. Buildings on the site are clustered in typical fashion to provide a combination of safety, security, and the sense of a natural environment. The social structure of the camp is enhanced by this clustering, which places girls and boys sleeping cabins in separate groups, and facilities for communal activities together. Large fields for sports and play are located to the east of the central campus. Founded in 1930, the present buildings date to c. 1970, but the recreational landscape recalls the camp purpose and several structures within the camp date to the original time period.

The second type of recreational landscape encompasses several hunt trails of the Traders Point Hunt. A considerable amount of the landscape has been devoted to this sport, which utilizes the gently rolling hills, pastures and meadows of the district to best advantage. The Hunt is intimately connected with the Estate Era of the district and with the influential Indianapolis families which made such an impact upon the area. Hunt trails have rotated over the years, but many original trails remain much the same today. A good example is the Madera Farm trail which has been hunted by Traders Point since the early days in the 1930s. One of two original hunt areas, it includes the Sutphin farm, Elder-Kunz farm and parts of the Goldman Camp. The Traders Point Hunt uses a scent trail, laid before the hunt begins. The trail has traditionally included naturalized fences and natural obstacles. Part of the trail follows Eagle Creek. Openings in the brush are often cleared to provide access between meadows and other features.

Structures (Roads, Fences, Bridges)

There are three concrete bridges within the district. One contributes to the district and two do not. Of the latter, one is too late to fall within the period of significance, the other has been changed and is being replaced. The contributing bridge, on Moore Road, carries the road over a significant Eagle Creek drainage at the south edge of the Elder-Kunz farm. It contributes to the district as a structure which helps define the early period of mechanized travel after the turn of the twentieth century. The key historic roads which help define and orient the district have previously been mentioned. In addition, there are several secondary arteries, now paved with asphalt and serving present-day automobile traffic. Most are located on early alignments, including 88th Street (which appears on an 1876 Atlas²). The concrete bridge across Lafayette Road at the southern end of the district dates to the first part of the twentieth century and thus would fall within the area of significance. The bridge (Marion County number 0102F) has been deemed not eligible for the National Register under Criteria A or C, by the consultants developing the current bridge evaluation project for the State of Indiana. While included in the district, it is a non-contributing resource.

Cemeteries

The district contains two historic cemeteries. Both establish their significance through association with the early settlement period of the district, under Criterion A, locally significant broad historical themes. Pleasant Hill cemetery, begun in 1830, is a graceful, rectangular plan cemetery located at 8320 Moore Road, about midway between 86th and 79th Streets. Its setting is typical of a rural cemetery, placed on a gently rising hill, with a narrow road traversing the burial ground from front to back and out to the road. The burials include some of the only reminders of the earliest families to settle in the area. The design of the cemetery is typical of such rural graveyards, where simple, sparse plantings and markers of limestone, sandstone and occasionally granite were ordered in neat rows. In this instance, a rock-faced, cast block wall was installed on the Moore Road side, sometime in the early twentieth century, adding a touch of distinction and grace to the landscape. The latter contains other decorative elements (see description, below) and is an important element in the landscape corridor established along Moore Road. In dramatic contrast to the openness of the Pleasant Hill cemetery is a small family burial ground, the Harmon-Cotton cemetery, located on a bluff above a pasture east of Eagle Creek on the Streibeck-Sutphin Farm at 6601 West 96th Street. The burials are located in the midst of a deep wood, and comprise five marble head and foot stones in roughly two rows. The stones are simple, but with stylistic elements which indicate the family's slightly elevated position in society. The burial ground is significant in association with the establishment of family farms during the mid-nineteenth century in this area. While family burial grounds were once a common sight, many have been lost or moved over the years. Thus, this cemetery is a relatively rare resource.

Individual Resources:

Properties are listed by address. In some cases, a single property will have multiple addresses and many resources, but is currently and historically associated as a single property. Where this is the case, we have broken down such properties for the sake of clarity.

Temporary buildings, such as garden sheds have not been included in the resource count. Amenities, such as pools, which are associated with the main house have not been listed as a separate resource, except where there is a distinct difference between the two elements.

As previously mentioned, there is often a distinct difference in characteristics as well as historic land use between pastures and croplands. In this district, where agricultural use related to equestrian activities is a large component of its significance, pastures are often quite specific and distinctive. Thus, where such obvious distinctions are present in the land, we have listed the two separately as individual sites. It is typical for horse pastures to be subdivided into smaller land units and laid out with fencing and maintenance trails between them. Nonetheless, we have put all such pastures together where they occur on large farms.

Madeira-Streibek-Sutphin Farm

This property is associated historically with the Streibek farm and the early twentieth century Madeira Farm, a stock operation. It is significant for its association with two historical contexts defined in the MPL: Rural and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township and Pike Township, Indiana: The Rise and Fall of Agriculture, 1852 – 1924 and the Estate Era, 1925 – 1956. The present farm contains much of the original acreage associated with the Streibek farm. The land owned by the Sutphin family includes the property across 96th Street, and the barns, pastures and croplands to the south and west. The description has been divided into three sections, to simplify the count. In addition, these have logical geographic associations. The first is below, and comprises much of the original Madeira farm, which was active during the early decades of the twentieth century.

6802 W. 96th Street/ Moore Ave.

This farmstead contains many outbuildings which relate to its agricultural history. They are significant for their association with this theme. While most of the farmland appears to be in rental or woods use at this time, the farm buildings portray vividly the agricultural heritage of the area. The main house has a high degree of integrity, even with a number of modern amenities. Some of the buildings, the main barn in particular, are deteriorated, but retain adequate integrity to contribute to the district.

Goldman Union Camp, 9349 Moore Road

This camp opened in June of 1930 as a place for poor Indianapolis children to gain health and other advantages of living in the country during the summer. It was purchased by the current owners in 1958 and will be celebrating its 50th year next year. The buildings date later than this, however, although the wading pool, the entry posts, the land and fields and an outdoor theatre/chapel all date from 1930 to 1958. The other buildings were constructed in the 60s and later. The land has been in the same use since it was founded in 1930. The circulation system is evident on the 1955 aerial map and is the same as present today. The entry roads and main arteries date from the opening in 1930. The entire property is significant for its association with recreation as described and rated in the MPL. It is also enriched by its association with the history of Indianapolis' Jewish community. There has been no change in this property since the MPL was completed. This significance is not based on the number of contributing/non-contributing resources within the confines of the grounds. During the fall, part of the grounds are used for the Traders Point Hunt course. See Supplemental Sketch Plan 2A.

Still present from that time period is the old swimming pool (Photo 0015) and some other small scale items, including a drinking fountain and several other rock features. A naturalized area used as a theatre/chapel also dates from the 1930 era.

This farmstead is surprisingly intact, with many of the outbuildings remaining and with an interesting evergreen shelter belt around the front, protecting the farmhouse and other buildings from wind and snow. The circulation system is not shown on the sketch maps, but consists of a central road running perpendicular to 81st Road (S. 850 E.), east toward the barns and a secondary farm lane running in a south easterly direction from the farmstead to the wood lot and fields. The property is owned by the heirs of the former owner, now deceased. His wife lives in the modern house at 7950 W. 96th and has lifetime rights of occupation.

The front t-plan section appears earlier, with the rear addition possibly an extension of an earlier summer kitchen. The house has a medium high gable roof, central chimney in the front wing and replaced windows in the front.
2)	Small barn/shed	Bldg	Gable roof	c. 1900	1 C		SSP-3A	This is a small, rectangular plan building, wood sided with a low pitch gable roof. Located to the north east of the main house, it probably serves as a storage, work shed.
3)	Garage	Bldg	Pyramid roof	c. 1920	1 C		SSP-3A	This is a wood frame, vertical board sided building, the entrance faces the central farm lane. It is located to the south of the main farm house.
4)	Storage/ Equipment Barn	Bldg	English	c. 1900	1 C		SSP-3A	This large, rectangular plan barn has a shed roof, open addition to the east to house farm equipment. It has a medium gable metal roof. The addition also has a metal roof. There is a second, shed roof addition to the south.
5)	Large Barn	Bldg	T-Plan, English	c. 1900	1 C		SSP-3A	This is the largest barn on the property. It has a new, metal roof painted green. The main wing of the barn has vertical board siding. The rear wing is connected to a fenced area for stock handling. There is also a small fenced pasture connected to the barn on the north side.
6)	Shed	Bldg	Rectangular plan	c. 1920	1 C		SSP-3A	This small, rectangular plan shed is wood sided and has a low gable roof. It appears to be a subsidiary structure serving the main barn.

								farmstead. The have identical medium high pitched roofs, with wood faced gable ends facing south. The roofs are metal clad. The siding is simple wood slats. The main opening, at the south of the barn has been enlarged to accommodate equipment, but may also store hay.
8)	Equipment Barn	Bldg	Rectangular Plan	c. 1920	1 C		SSP-3A	This barn is nearly identical to the one described above, but just slightly larger, and the opening is slightly wider. Unlike the barn above, this one has a small shed roof addition on the east side.
9)	Loafing Shed	Bldg	Rectangular Plan	c. 1920	1 C		SSP-3A	This is a long, narrow rectangle, not quite a story, with a gable roof, longer on one side. A typical shed for the period with a metal roof. This building, like many on the farm is in a deteriorated condition.
10)	Pastures, cropland	Site	n/a	c. 1880	1C		SSP-3A	Adjacent to the main barn and extending east are several fenced pastures for cattle or other stock. Running from the south edge of the farmstead and encompassing most of the land to woodlots on the east and south part of the property, is extensive cropland. The latter was undoubtedly to feed the stock and is probably in rental acreage today.

7103 W. 96th Street, Lamberjack Farm

This property was purchased by the family of the present owner c. 1967. The house was built in 1962, but the barn on the property pre-dates the house. The pastures and fences, for the most part date prior to the purchase of the farm. All are associated with the equestrian theme of the district. The large barn is part of a larger agricultural activity which once encompassed most of the acreage at the site.

This property was the seminal farmstead for several adjacent properties. The main part of the farmhouse dates to c. 1914. The drives, house and barns are present in the early 1950s and most date much farther back. This farm is significant for its association with the theme: Rise and Fall of Agriculture. The topography of the site is dramatic, with the house located on a bluff, while the barns and western portion drop off into a hollow. The house is surrounded by mature trees and the drive is curvilinear. The barns date to the 1880s.

This property is related to the previous one and was all part of a large farm during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, as such it contributes to the district theme: Rise and Fall of Agriculture. This farm has been in agricultural use for a large part of the period of significance. It is related to the themes: Rise and Fall of Agriculture. Today, this property consists of many acres of horse pasture, a main house, a large brick barn and several small barns and sheds. The pastures are divided by 3-board horse fences. The significance of the farm does not relate to the present house and buildings, since they were built in the 1970s. However, the land retains significance within the context mentioned above. Referred to as "Quillan's Woods", a 1956 aerial map demonstrates that it was populated with mature trees, woodlands and crop fields.

This farm, as a designed agricultural landscape (Steelwater, P. 40) contributes to the district. It is significant for its relationship to the second and third generations who inherited property compiled during the Estate Era (See Steelwater p. 40). The road frontage has been altered and farm buildings moved in to serve the present use, however it is still farmed and has long been used as part of the Traders Point Hunt territory. The barns near Moore Road accommodate the milking operation, dairy products production and on-site retail business. Pastures which extend up to the Goldman Camp are presently in cultivation as fields for forage crops and pasture. The boundary of the original property, owned by Samuel Hornaday in 1889, has been little altered during the intervening years.

8561 Moore Road Dairy Farm (#50030 on the interim report)

The owners have an abstract which indicates that David McCurdy first bought a large parcel of land including this property in early 1831. By 1890 it had become the property of Mr. & Mrs. De Long who ran a dairy farm. The land was subdivided among the heirs after Mr. De Long's death and some parcels became a camp (the Christamore Aid Camp). The adjacent road was once called the Tolbert E. Moore free gravel road. The current owner bought this property in the 1980s. The property contributes to the district as an example of the type of agricultural farm (dairy farm) which was typical of this region.

Section 8. Statement of Significance

Summary

The Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District meets National register Criteria A and C. The district is one of several identified in the rural historical and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township (Boone Co.) and Pike Township (Marion Co.) Indiana. 1820-1956 MPL. This district represents the distinct development trend of a historically cohesive portion of the townships, from early Euro-American settlement, to general purpose agriculture, to cattle and dairy raising, and finally, to purposeful adaptation of the land for estate and recreation uses by wealthy industrialists of Indianapolis. Traditional British-style fox hunting and related equestrian pursuits are trademark recreational activities of a number of residents of the district, beginning formally in 1930 and extending to the present day. Historic buildings in the district range from 19th century farmhouses to interwar era Colonial Revival and tudor Revival estate buildings. Vernacular barns, grain bins, and sheds represent the agrarian traditions of the area. Pastures, stables, loafing sheds and exercise tracks are part of the equestrian theme. Long-used hunting trails, century-old orthogonal-gridded farm fields, wooded creek beds, and tree-studded, expansive lawns also demonstrate management and manipulation of the land. Formal designed landscapes represent a more extensive man-made alteration of the land; a number survive on estate properties.

This nomination is based on the Multiple Property Listing: Rural Historical and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township (Boone County) and Pike Township (Marion County), Indiana, 1820-1956 (MPL). The goal of the MPL was to identify and develop themes of rural historical significance as expressed by individual resources of the built environment and agricultural landscapes within Eagle and Pike Townships.³ Three historical contexts were developed: "First European-American Settlement, 1822 – 1851; The Rise and Fall of Agriculture, 1852-1924; The Estate Era, 1925-1956. Properties within the Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District represent elements of all three historic contexts developed within the MPL. Key resources in the district demonstrate those farms and residences established by prominent Indianapolis business and industrial families. Related to this context is the development of the Traders Point Hunt, using territories which were owned by many of these individuals. In addition, many of those who formed and continued the hunt were property owners within the district. Further, an equestrian culture, including farms dedicated to raising and training thoroughbred horses and skilled riders, grew up in the district beginning with the period between 1930 and 1950. This is still an important part of the cultural landscape today. Boone County has recognized this fact through special equestrian zones in their county plan.

Narrative

Context I: First European-American Settlement, 1822-1851. All of the district is located north west of Indianapolis, within central Indiana. Organized European-American settlement of this area began shortly after statehood in 1816. The bulk of the district is located in Marion County, formed in 1821, with a small part located in Boone County, formed in 1831.

Land in central Indiana was available for purchase after an office opened in 1819 in Franklin County, south of Richmond. By 1822, parcels were offered in Pike and Eagle Townships. Most were sold to speculators. Business was brisk until the Panic of 1837 rocked the country and the world. As recovery began to take hold, more permanent settlers moved into the area. The bulk of these settlers (380 out of 403 in Pike Township according to the 1850 Census) were farmers. Although he is not buried within the district, a leading settler and one of the largest early landowners, David McCurdy, owned land west of Eagle Creek, including parcels which later became some of the well-known farms in the area. One of these, the De Long Farm, at 8561 Moore Road contains an impressive farm house and barn, although these buildings date from occupants of the latter nineteenth century. Undoubtedly McCurdy land is the predecessor for many later farms.⁴

Very few resources remain from this early period of settlement. One early farmhouse is worthy of note. The core house located at 7658 Noell Road (Map SSP-10, Photograph 10-036) dates to this period. A simple, frame central passage building, it has endured numerous additions over the years, but still conveys its early progenitor. A folk building, it maintains its original fenestration and form. With early siding and other details intact, it retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district, under Criterion A, for its association with this early settlement context.

The most important resources connected to the period of early settlement are two cemeteries. While not ordinarily eligible for National Register listing, Pleasant Hill Cemetery, 8320 Moore Road (SSP-8 and Photo 8-032) contributes to the district for several reasons. Founded in 1830, it contains a comprehensive roster of burials of pioneer families, thus documenting the early settlement of the area. It has a strong landscape integrity and presence. It is locally significant under Criterion A for these reasons. According to the MPL, it is also significant under Criterion B since a proportion of the burials are those of "persons of transcendent importance" to the initial settlement period, for whom there is no remaining site or building. As a rural cemetery, it recalls the early, sparsely populated period between 1822 and 1851 in Pike County. Its landscape is appropriately sparse for the period and remains high in integrity. Although there are later burials in the cemetery, they do not intrude on the earlier ones. Markers range in design from tall obelisk-and urn, truncated tree, and plain stelae popular during the nineteenth century to formal granite pillar and lintel compositions of later date. The late nineteenth or early twentieth century edge details, including the cast block retaining walls and objects, while in disrepair, contribute to the sense of continuity of the burial ground. Thus it meets requirements for registration as a contributing resource in the district.⁵

A second burial ground, the small Harmon-Cotton Cemetery is a good example of the type of family burial ground which was prevalent during the nineteenth century, but is becoming a rare resource. The burials are located on the south edge of the Sutphin Farm at 6601 W. 96th Street on a bluff overlooking a pasture. This secluded plot contains five known burials of early settlers in the two families. The earliest burial, that of James Harmon, dates to 1847. He and his wife, Philadelphia are buried with simple flat topped marble headstones, along with their son Granville who died at the age of 19 in 1850. In addition, Nancy and John Cotton are buried here, the former in 1877 and the latter in 1856.⁶ The latest marker in the complex is the most ornate, although still relatively modest, featuring a hand pointing toward heaven, a Victorian pleasantry. Although the cemetery is overgrown, the markers, and the rare evidence of social customs relating to early nineteenth century life in the area help this resource meet the requirements for inclusion as a locally contributing resource in the district.

Moore Road, as it travels from Lafayette Road in the south to Ford Road in the north is an important north-south artery in the district. As mentioned in the MPL, it is a subsidiary arterial, which has been present since 1855, according to that document. (Steelwater, p. 48) Other maps dating back to the nineteenth century document the integrity of location to at least 1876. A historic transportation corridor, it contributes to the significance of the district as an artery for the development of farms and other activities. Significant sites along this road include the Pleasant Hill Cemetery, a resource from the first settlement period, 1822-1851. Several Estate Era resources lie on its edges, the Bowman Elder and Traders Point Farms, as well as the Elder-Kunz-Hornaday farm, now Traders Point Creamery. In addition the road is carried over a tertiary drainage of the Eagle Creek water shed by an early nineteenth century concrete filled spandrel arch bridge. Other important historic properties of the period connected with the Rise and Fall of Agriculture, 1852 – 1924 can be found along the road, including a farmhouse connected to Spring Brook Farm at 8798 Moore Rd. and the Barn and Farmhouse of the De Long Dairy Farm located at 8561 Moore Rd. Also associated with the road is an outstanding example of Greek Revival architecture, the Moore-Asher home of 1879, located at 8407 Moore Road. The road retains its historical route, right-of-way, and width, associations, feeling and setting (for the most part) and thus is eligible under Criterion A as a contributing resource to the district. (See Steelwater, p. 49 for criteria).

Context II. The Rise and Fall of Agriculture, 1852 – 1924

From 1850 to 1860, the miles of railroad track in Indiana nearly doubled. This explosion of nineteenth century technology dramatically changed the ability of farmers to market their crops. For a rural, agricultural area like that encompassed by the Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District, the emergence of the railroad brought growth and prosperity. Inland capitals such as Indianapolis came to prominence thanks to the expanded market access of this new transportation technology. River cities, located for the most part in Indiana's southern tier, began to decline.

The transition from subsistence to commercial farming also occurred during this era, as agriculture brought "unprecedented prosperity to Indiana's economy"⁷. This enabled a number of Pike Township farmers to produce a variety of agricultural products, especially dairy products. As the nineteenth century waned, population growth increased in Indianapolis, Lebanon, Noblesville and other towns within the region. According to the records, butter was produced in the township. By 1880, three hundred and three farms in Pike Township were producing 74,300 pounds annually.⁸ With its rolling hills and ravines, the land encompassed within the district is well-suited to grazing activities – an advantage for both stock farming and equestrian use. In addition, its proximity to the burgeoning population around Indianapolis, meant that dairy products could be quickly transported to market. Among the remaining dairy farms in the district were the Spring Brook Farm, whose barns are displayed at 7320 W. 88th Street and the De Long Dairy Farm at 8561 Moore Road. Although related to the Estate Era, the Traders Point Farm on the west side of Moore Road, also demonstrates the dairy heritage of the region.

Agricultural production began to wane as the twentieth century dawned. After World War I, overproduction was responsible for further decline. In Marion County, as the total amount of agricultural acreage declined from 242,000 to 155,000, the average farm size also declined, from 71 to 68 acres. In Boone County, the decline was from a total acreage of 264,000 to 254,000, although the average farm size increased from 75 to 97 acres.⁹ This probably reflects the exodus to the country and the increased suburbanization which was occurring in Marion County even at this late date. Evidence that this situation was possibly less apparent within the confines of the district exists in the remaining elements of the farms mentioned. In all cases, large and well built dairy barns were built during this period, from 1880 to 1920.

During the heyday of agricultural production in the late nineteenth century, Indiana joined about thirteen other states in developing agricultural research stations.¹⁰ The era of "scientific farming" was in full swing and owners competed for large and beautifully appointed farm buildings which would also heighten production. This trend continued into the new century and can be seen in some of the buildings which evolved during the Estate Era in the district. One state agency serving the agricultural community grew from the Indiana Farm Federation, organized in 1919 to the Indiana Farm Bureau in 1923. This organization assisted the farm economy during the Great Depression of the 1930s by cooperatively purchasing and establishing manufacturing plants, mills and even insurance.¹¹ A remaining resource which reflects this concern is the Farm Bureau Co-operative Facility, built in 1925 at 7618 Lafayette Road. It reflects the effective defense mounted by farms against difficult economic conditions. While some elements of the building have been removed, the central part of the square grain tower and the main buildings are intact. This property contributes to the district for its association with organized farm support systems, during the Rise and Fall of Agriculture and later.

Several farmstead resources in the Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District demonstrate the growth and decline of family and commercial farms during the period between 1852 and 1924. The De Long Dairy farm, originally part of the vast McCurdy holdings in the township, is presently represented by a Queen Anne farm house, with elements which date to the earliest period of occupation during the first half of the nineteenth century. Also a part of the farmstead is the gambrel roofed dairy barn, now used as a workshop (See photo 8-030 and Supplemental Sketch Plan 8). The well head from the farm is still visible and there is a spring or milk house located in association with it, evidence of nineteenth century refrigeration, which used deep well water, that ran past the containers of milk to keep it cool. Crop and pasture lands which were once part of this farm are probably now located in adjacent parcels. Although no longer actively farmed, this property retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district within the context of the Rise and Fall of Agriculture, c. 1852- 1924, and under Criterion A.

The Spring Brook Farm was broken into several parcels after its decline. However, several large buildings remain to serve as reminders of the farm's importance to the local area. A large English barn and a gambrel roofed dairy barn are two elements on the property located at 7320 West 88th Street (See photo 7-029 and Supplemental Sketch Plan 7). The property also contains a concrete block milk house as well. The large dairy barn has been converted to a residence but retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district. Adjacent to these buildings and associated with them is a house and outbuilding across the street at 8798 Moore Road. This property appears under the ownership of Spring Brook Farm in a plat map of 1935-40¹² (See photo no. 028 and Supplemental Sketch Plan 7). The house is a gable front building with a high pitched roof and three-bay façade. The outbuilding is likely a spring house used to keep milk and other products cool. Both properties are significant in association with the period between 1852 and 1924, the Rise and Fall of Agriculture, as described in the MPL.

A third property also contains some of the buildings from the later part of the period when this area was replete with dairy and cattle farms. At 7326 W. 88th Street, a long, narrow former chicken coop and a smaller version of the gambrel roof dairy barn which is located at 7320 is reminiscent of the farm and its activity from the 1920s through the Great Depression and World War II, when many families produced eggs and dairy products for their own consumption, as a subsistence strategy, as well as selling any surplus to Indianapolis. The core of the farm house associated with this property dates to the latter part of the nineteenth century. These buildings and the farm acreage associated with them contribute to the district in association with the context: Rise and Fall of Agriculture. While the farmhouse has been altered, the land and other buildings convey the feeling and association required to meet the standards for contributing registration as detailed in the MPL.

Located at 7791 West 96th Street is a remaining farm from the period described here. This farm is no longer active for agricultural production, although some equestrian activity is pursued here. The main farmhouse, while having additions, retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district. It is an American Four-Square in form, with square massing and other details of the style. The farm land has dramatic topography, with the farm house and other buildings located atop a bluff and a large barn, with subsidiary elements in a hollow where a stream ran through and which fed stock ponds. This would have been logical in nineteenth century farm planning, where the ability to provide continuous watering to the stock was crucial to production. The large, nineteenth century barn on this property and related farm buildings on the adjacent property are reminiscent of both the time period and the context (See photographs 023, 024, 025, and Supplemental Sketch Plan 6).

Another farmstead which remains but is no longer actively involved in farming is the property at 6802 W. 96th Street. This is a remarkably intact collection of buildings which date from the latter nineteenth and the first few decades of the twentieth century (See Photos 011, 012 and Supplemental Sketch Plan 2). The farmhouse has been updated and a pool has been added at the back of the house. However, the gable-front building is gracefully surrounded by a veranda, with turned posts and other decorative elements. The building also features fish scale shingles in the gable ends. The complex reflects a grid pattern in the orientation of the various outbuildings, some of which are in disrepair. The farmstead retains adequate integrity to contribute to the district. An interesting note: The farm also is associated with considerable acreage to the north. Like the others previously mentioned, this property contains a number of elements which comprise the farmstead and which reflect the context of the district. (See detailed description in Section 7.) Thus, this resource is a contributing element.

While also related to the third historical context, The Estate Era, Traders Point Farm demonstrates typical, high style farm buildings and practices of the first few decades of the twentieth century. The tight grid plan of the buildings emphasizes the efficiency of operation which was sought during this time period. Feeding, milking and storage of fodder all related closely to one another, while the generous fields radiated out from this core activity center. The buildings within this farm also reflect some of the innovations in farm practice, such as the ovate corn crib with pierced metal walls. The farm is maintained today as an active agricultural enterprise, with a cattle operation. Expansion of building facilities to provide for modern machinery is taking place at the west side, near the historic complex, but does not detract from its significance. Expansions to the farm/tenant house are sensitive to the original setting and feeling of the property. Thus, it meets the requirements for registration under this context and as a contributing element to the district (See Photo 035 and Supplemental Sketch Plan 9).

Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District is also graced with a number of remnant farm buildings, and other elements. These contribute to the district's overall significance as a part of the period of agricultural sway, during the late nineteenth and early twentieth century. Among these are the barn at 7103 W. 96th Street, (Photo 019), and resources at 7109, 7435, 7449, and 7535 W. 96th Street. In addition, the barns and tenant houses on parts of the Sutphin-Madiera farm complex also contribute to this context, as examples of the agricultural landscape which prevailed until the early 1920s.

Individual resources within the district which relate to the context and which are individually eligible for the National Register, include the 1879 Moore-Asher house, a two story Greek Revival, I-form house located at 8407 (8409) Moore Road. This building was included in the Interim Report (#50029) and mentioned in the context of pre-railroad buildings. (Although later in date, its form is easily recognizable throughout the Midwest from earlier buildings.) Another example of buildings which contribute to the context, in this case a post-railroad, gable-front building, is the one on the Elder-Kunz farm, also recorded by the Interim Report for Pike Township and mentioned in the MPL, this is located at 9211 Moore Road adjacent to the present-day Traders Point Creamery.

Context III. The Estate Era , 1925 – 1956.

The Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District is replete with resources which relate to this context and to its related historical theme, the Traders Point Hunt. Equestrian endeavors have been a part of this region since before the period of significance, but during the first part of the twentieth century, as wealthy Indianapolis manufacturers and business families established farms and homes in the area, the recreational sport of fox hunting fit comfortably into the hills and woods of the landscape.

The practice of amassing rural property and pursuing a farm and home in the country began to occur in the area north west of Indianapolis after the turn of the twentieth century. In the district, this effort was undertaken by a relatively small number of families, most of which were acquainted, or related. It has continued over the years, as the second and third generations of these owners have inherited the properties. Estate farmers derived their wealth from endeavors outside of rural farming. Their interests tended to focus on a particular breed, or crop, rather than market considerations. These "gentlemen farmers" had a lot in common with 18th Century English estate owners who valued a "picturesque" landscape, with historical building types. Their homes in this landscape were considerably grander than the relatively smaller farmhouses which were prevalent in earlier eras. But they often maintained the meadows, croplands and wood lots from previous eras.

The key families which amassed lands, built farms and homes in Pike and Eagle townships included the Lillys, Krannerts, Fortunes, Elders and Sutphins. Of these, only the Lilly family is not represented within the Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District. In addition, the home of a prominent local family, the Noells, and a property related to the Lacy family, important Indianapolis industrialists, are represented among the resources. The emergence of these families within the area of the present district began in 1925 with the construction of the Krannert Estate on West 79th Street.

The Krannert Estate

Herman C. Krannert arrived in Indianapolis from Chicago and founded the Inland Container Corporation. He and his wife became well-known philanthropists in Indianapolis. The estate they built began in 1935 with the purchase of 160 acres on 7043 West 79th Street. Ultimately, the family amassed 600 acres. They built a mansion house and the complex of buildings in the Normandy Farm, both of which are separated from the district by extensive modern residential development. The farm was noted for the high quality of construction of its buildings, including several Gothic Roof barns, the pride of the "gentleman farmer." (The largest of these was moved in the late 1990s to the Indiana State Fairgrounds.) It was also a demonstration of the most modern, scientific agricultural practices of the era, managed by experts and assisted by Purdue University. Normandy

Farm, named for its landscape, reminiscent of the French province, produced prize-winning Guernsey dairy cows for forty years.¹⁴

The Krannert Estate is represented today in the district by the Gate House located adjacent to the street side. In addition, much of the landscape remains between the Gate House and a slightly altered Bath House and Pool. The landscape includes a designed pool and waterfall, as well as a tennis court. There is a garden in connection with the pool which reflects formal garden design trends of the period. The two features are separated by a long, curvilinear drive (See Supplemental Sketch Plan 10 and Photo 038). In addition, located nearby on 6969 W. 79th, is a small building, with a formal sunken garden in the front, as well as a pool and tennis court in the back. This is known as the Krannert Tea House. It is described more fully in Section 7. Although much of the original acreage of this estate has been lost, adequate resources remain to contribute to the district, significant under Criteria A and C, within the themes of Architecture, Agriculture and Entertainment/Recreation. The buildings are outstanding examples of the eclectic, in this case French Eclectic, architecture of the early twentieth century. As examples of excellent design and workmanship, all three qualify under Criterion C. The remnant landscapes also fall under this category. Although deteriorated, they reflect their original design and intent. However, as examples of the fabric of accumulated wealth of the early twentieth century, these resources also qualify under Criterion A.

Additional Estate Properties

Two other properties in the same locale, along W. 79th Street east of Eagle Creek also reflect the Estate Era theme, although on a more modest scale. The Lacy home at 7030 W. 79th was constructed in 1934. Howard J. Lacy founded the U. S. Corrugated Fibre Box Company in 1912. The business prospered and by 1952, his son, Howard K. Lacy II, had taken over leadership. Although the younger Lacy died prematurely in 1959, his widow continued to operate the business changing it to Lacy Diversified Industries in 1972. True to its name, it continues today with a diversified portfolio of business and industry interests, still under the leadership of family members. The present resident of the estate is Margot Lacy Eccles, a valued leader of the company with special interests in its philanthropy. A second property, the large and beautifully landscaped home and property at 7229 West 79th Street was reputedly built for a well known local medical man in 1929. Although somewhat overgrown, the building and its landscape retain adequate integrity. Both of these properties, with their outbuildings and landscape contribute to the district as part of the historic theme: The Estate Era.

In addition to English precedents, the amassing of large country estates by wealthy financiers and industrialists owes much to the well-known "Country Life Movement". As described in the MPL, this encouraged a return to the country, including the privacy, prestige and expansive space of an estate. Further, Indianapolis' gentry found interest and relaxation through pursuing the improvement of farms.

Estates related to Eli Lilly and his Associates in Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District.

The MPL establishes a social circle around the Lilly-Fortune-Elder and Sutphin families. The district reflects both original estates massed by these families within the second and third decade of the twentieth century and those compiled or operated by the second and third generations of these families. Samuel Brady Sutphin was an Indianapolis neighbor of J. K. Lilly, Jr. His son, Samuel R. Sutphin and his wife Lisa amassed the property comprising the properties located at 6350, 6360, 6301 and 6601 W. 96th Street (See Supplemental Sketch Plan 1, Photos 1-001 through 1-005). This property has resources acquired from the former Walden and Streibeck farms, as well as other properties over the years. During the Estate Era, the Sutphins bred Charolais cattle on the land, calling their operation the Madeira Farm. The land is presently owned by their son, Samuel B. Sutphin II. This property is significant under Criterion A for its association with both the Estate Era historic theme and the Rise and Fall of Agriculture. Its remaining buildings and acreage retain adequate integrity to meet the requirements of registration outlined in the MPL.

Another property which relates to the social circle of Lilly and other wealthy Indianapolis families, is the William Fortune house, and garage located at 8221 and 8181 Moore Road. They are an architectural departure from the other Estate Era properties. Apparently only intended as a summer home it is a simple, two-story stucco building. The Art Moderne design and the wrought iron railed terrace give it a distinction. It reflects the country life of outdoor recreation adopted by the three generations of this family in the area. William Fortune lived with his daughter, Madeline, his son-in-law, Bowman Elder, and his grandchildren until the Bowman Elders built their own grand home across Moore Road six years later.¹⁵ Today, the two remaining buildings from this estate, the home and garage, have been sold to other owners, however they still retain adequate integrity to contribute to the district under Criterion A.

The Bowman Elder Estate, at 8084, 8100, 8222 and Moore Road is a good example of the next generation of estates, developed by these same, related families. The home was designed by the Indianapolis architect Willard Osler and shows the influence of the immensely popular Colonial Revival style which enjoyed a resurgence during this time, when the Rockefeller family was beginning the restoration of Colonial Williamsburg in Virginia. It is a classic example of a graceful country mansion, with its statuesque massing and the graceful sycamore allee, entered through formal gates. Also on this farm is the active Traders Point Farm which epitomizes the well-built and efficiently laid out stock farm favored by the country gentlemen farmers of this era. The estate also contains a series of stable buildings and tenant homes. The stables have been altered, and additional modern structures added, but they continue to contribute to the district through association with Criterion A, as an example of the fully developed Estate Era home and farm. The equestrian association and continued activity mark this farm as a part of the properties related, like the Sutphin property, to the Traders Point Hunt. Russell Fortune, Sr., William's son, along with Russell Fortune, Jr. as well as Samuel R. Sutphin, were founding members of the Traders Point Hunt. The property meets the requirements for a contributing resource as outlined in the MPL.

As described in the MPL, the succeeding generations of the Estate Era have influenced the landscape character of the properties within the district. For clarity, it may be helpful to reiterate some of the connections here: William Fortune's son, was Russell Fortune Sr., his son Russell Fortune, Jr. moved to the area around 1950.¹⁶ The property is located on W. 96th Street and shown on Supplemental Sketch Plan 3 (Photos 016, 017, 018.) Today, this property contains significant buildings and landscapes and is owned by Russell Fortune III, who raises thoroughbred horses on the farm. The older barns on the site and the main house, dating within the area of significance, meet the requirements for the property to be associated with this context, thus contribute to the district.

William Fortune's daughter Madeline married Bowman Elder and together they moved into the area in the 1930s. Their son, William L. Elder and grandchildren, William, Jr. and Jane Elder Kunz inherited shares of the family property. William, Jr. now owns and occupies Traders Point Farm and the Estate home, while Jane Elder and her husband Peter Kunz, a surgeon, own Traders Point Creamery and Dairy Farm. This is the property referred to as the Elder-Kunz-Hornaday property at 9211 Moore Road. The property was once part of the Fortune estate. It includes a tenant house from the historical period. The balance of the property can be considered a designed agricultural landscape. Two barns which serve the business were moved onto the property c. 2000, and a newly built home is also present, the farm property has adequate integrity to contribute to the district. As detailed in the MPL, the composite land holdings have a surprising degree of continuity. In 1880, the 142 acres presently held by the Elder Kunz family were part of a 200 acre farm owned by Samuel Hornaday. Much of the property which has been under cultivation is still in the same land use, according to aerial maps of 1956 and present day (See Steelwater, for earlier aerial maps.) The entrance configuration of the buildings associated with the creamery operation has been refigured, but the basic shapes and wooded areas are consistent.¹⁷ Based on these findings and the present conditions of the farm, this property can be considered a contributing resource to the district, under Criterion A, for its association with the second generation of the Estate Era farms and families.

An individual resource which qualifies for inclusion as a contributing building within the district is the Samuel Dowden home. Built in 1930, it is a good example of the Colonial Revival style popular in this area and in the United States after 1920.

The Goldman Camp

In addition, in contrast to city life, life in the country was seen as healthful and "natural". An additional result of this movement was the emergence of temporary summer residents for children, the summer camp.¹⁸ A resource of this type is located within the district at 9349 Moore Road. The camp was opened in 1930 on land owned by the Indianapolis Jewish Federation. Called Big Eagle Camp, it was at first dedicated to serving anemic and undernourished children with a healthful program of outdoor activity, fresh milk and rest. Other children were also allowed to participate.

Ultimately, in 1958, the camp became the Goldman Union Camp, its present designation. The camp was the successor to a number of camps operated by the Indianapolis Jewish Federation. It was the culmination of many efforts, including those of then president of the Federation, G. A. Efroymsen and Dr. Harry A Jacobs, the chairman of the camp committee. Mayor of Indianapolis, Reginald H. Sullivan, presented the gift of the camp land on behalf of the anonymous donor at the opening ceremonies. The gateway columns and landscaping were a gift presented from the surplus of funds raised during World War I for entertaining Jewish soldiers. They still grace the entrance to the camp. The original acreage, then as now, extended from Moore Road to Eagle Creek. (The name of the camp was derived from the Creek.) Moore Road, at the time of the camp opening was a gravel road accessed from State Road 52.¹⁹ This resource contributes to the Rural Historic District for its association with the Estate Era, and Social Movements connected with the Jewish community in Indianapolis. Thus, Criterion A applies. Although many of the buildings which presently serve children in the camp date after the period of significance, the camp itself, based on the evidence and description in the MPL meets the requirements for a contributing resource in the district.

Traders Point Hunt

As described in the MPL, the Country Life Movement which encouraged the gentry to establish picturesque farms in the region, had precedents in England. American fox hunting, as a pastime and sport, appeared early in the British Colonies, especially Maryland and Virginia. The hunt as an organized, certified institution in America only became possible with the establishment of the Masters of Foxhounds Association in 1907. The Traders Point Hunt is the only hunt in Indiana accredited by this organization.

With land becoming available during the 1920s, as farmers retired parcels from cultivation, estate owners purchased and amassed farms which contained a mix of pasture, woodlands, and waterways. These were perfect landscapes for the pursuit of fox hunting. In November of 1931, Russell Fortune, Jr. along with a few friends, met together with a couple, Mr. & Mrs. George Bailey (who had hunted in Virginia) to discuss the formation of a hunt club in this area. The initial group who met at the red barn on Moore Road included: George Bailey (Master of Fox Hounds), Russell Fortune Jr., (Huntsman), Nate Davis (First Whipper-In), Wells Hampton (Second Whipper-In). The field (those riding in the hunt) was composed of Mrs. G. M. Bailey, Mr. & Mrs. C. O. Alig, Charles Mayer, Josephine Mayer, Ralph Lockwood, Russell Fortune Sr., G. M. Williams, Ann Ayres, Thomas Ruckelshaus, Hilda Hibben, Robert Bohlen, Mrs. Martha Holliday, Mrs. Lowel Wilson, Ted Severin and Willis Adams, Jr. From the beginning the trail was laid by scent, rather than a live fox. In this case, a live coon was led by a chain. The formal hunt was not organized until early spring of 1932 when many of the same people met to discuss the formation. By the next meeting the formal organization was complete and the first Board of Directors elected. They included many names well known in Indianapolis history: C. O. Alig as President, Ralph Lockwood as Secretary, Charles Mayer as Treasurer and Nate Davis, Kiefer Mayer, Thomas Ruckelshaus and Samuel B. Sutphin as members. This key group comprised many of the estate landowners whose farms still serve as hunt territory.²⁰

During the latter part of 1932, with the club officially formed, social events, such as the Riders and Drivers Party, were organized to celebrate the role of farmers in supporting the hunt trail. The following year, they began breeding their own hounds and by 1934 had rented the present Hunt Club kennels in Eagle Township (See Fife, Traders Point Hunt Rural Historic District nomination). In that same year, 1934, the Traders Point Hunt achieved recognition as a member of the Master of Fox Hounds Association of America, a distinction it continues to hold. Although the hunt was nearly always conducted via a scent trail, on occasion a wild fox would turn up. This occurred in 1938, in a hunt on the Burford Danner west farm. It was remembered enthusiastically by the membership.

The original hunt territory, during the 1930s, ranged across many farms in both Pike and Eagle Townships, oriented around Lafayette Road, Eagle Creek and the territory west of Zionsville, Indiana. However, by 1984, only two of the original hunt trails remained active. The onset of residential development, highway enlargement and "sprawl" have severely restricted the available land for hunt activities. The ideal country for fox hunting includes gently rolling hills, working farms, woods and streams. Fences can be chicken coop, or stacked logs as well as post and rail along with natural obstacles. Most field fences are between 2' 6" and 3' 3", while those used in a course devised for a "field-in" can be as high as 4'. Of the two remaining original hunt territories, one is located within the Traders Point Eagle Creek Rural Historic District and is known as Madeira (See Map 2).²¹ It is organized around the Sutphin farm holdings on West 96th Street. This hunt area includes the property from Moore Road on the west, W. 96th on the north and Interstate 465 on the east, as well as the southern boundary of the Sutphin holdings. (The other original hunt territory is located near the kennels, on Mrs. Sylvester Johnson Jr.'s Wild Air Farm, part of the Traders Point Hunt Rural Historic District.) The property concerned with this activity is significant for its association with this recreational activity and with the estate owners who began the hunt and whose second and third generation descendants maintain its continuity. Thus, association with the hunt territory contributes to the significance of the district under Criterion A for its relevance to the theme, The Estate Era, 1924 – 1956.

Note: This nomination is based on the work completed in 2006 for the MPL, "Rural and Architectural Resources of Eagle Township (Boone County) and Pike Township (Marion County), Indiana, 1822-1956" by Eliza Steelwater. As such, much of the reference sources overlap. Those which may be of interest to readers of this nomination are repeated below. For a complete listing, see the MPL.

Turn south along this line and continue to the southern limit of the property, turning west to follow the southern property line and that of 7791, 7805 and 8001 W. 96th Street. At the junction of the western property line of 8001, turn north along this line, continuing to follow the property lines, turning west to their intersection with Cooper Road. Turn north along the east side of Cooper Road to the intersection of W. 96th Street and continue north along the east side of this road (81st Road, in Boone County), to the northern boundary of 7625 81st Road, turn east following the north boundary of this property (R.O.W. of I-865) to the place of beginning.

Boundary Justification

The boundary of the district has been drawn to include all of the major farms which contribute to the district, including the Sutphin Madiera Farm and related holdings, the Fortune Horse Farm, the Elder-Kunz-Hornaday farm and the Bowman-Elder, Traders Point Farms, as well as key properties with significance relating to the three historic contexts developed in the MPL. The boundary eliminates, as much as possible, modern developments and intrusions and includes all of historic Moore Road, much of W. 96th Street, the farm lane Streibeck Road and Eagle Creek between Lafayette Road and above W. 96th Street. Thus a preponderance of resources which relate to the contexts developed are included, as well as the key natural and transportation features which have been important in the historical development of the region.

Note: All buildings are post-1956 and thus outside the period of significance. For simplicity, they are NOT shown with a pattern. Only the site itself that contains the entrance gates, the acreage, the pool, the outdoor chapel and some small features, is contributing. This resource contributes to the district through its association with the recreational history of the area, not for its architecture.
